

The Vanderbilt suite in the Vanderbilt Hotel was the equivalent of a complete town house. Photograph shows a part of the dining room.

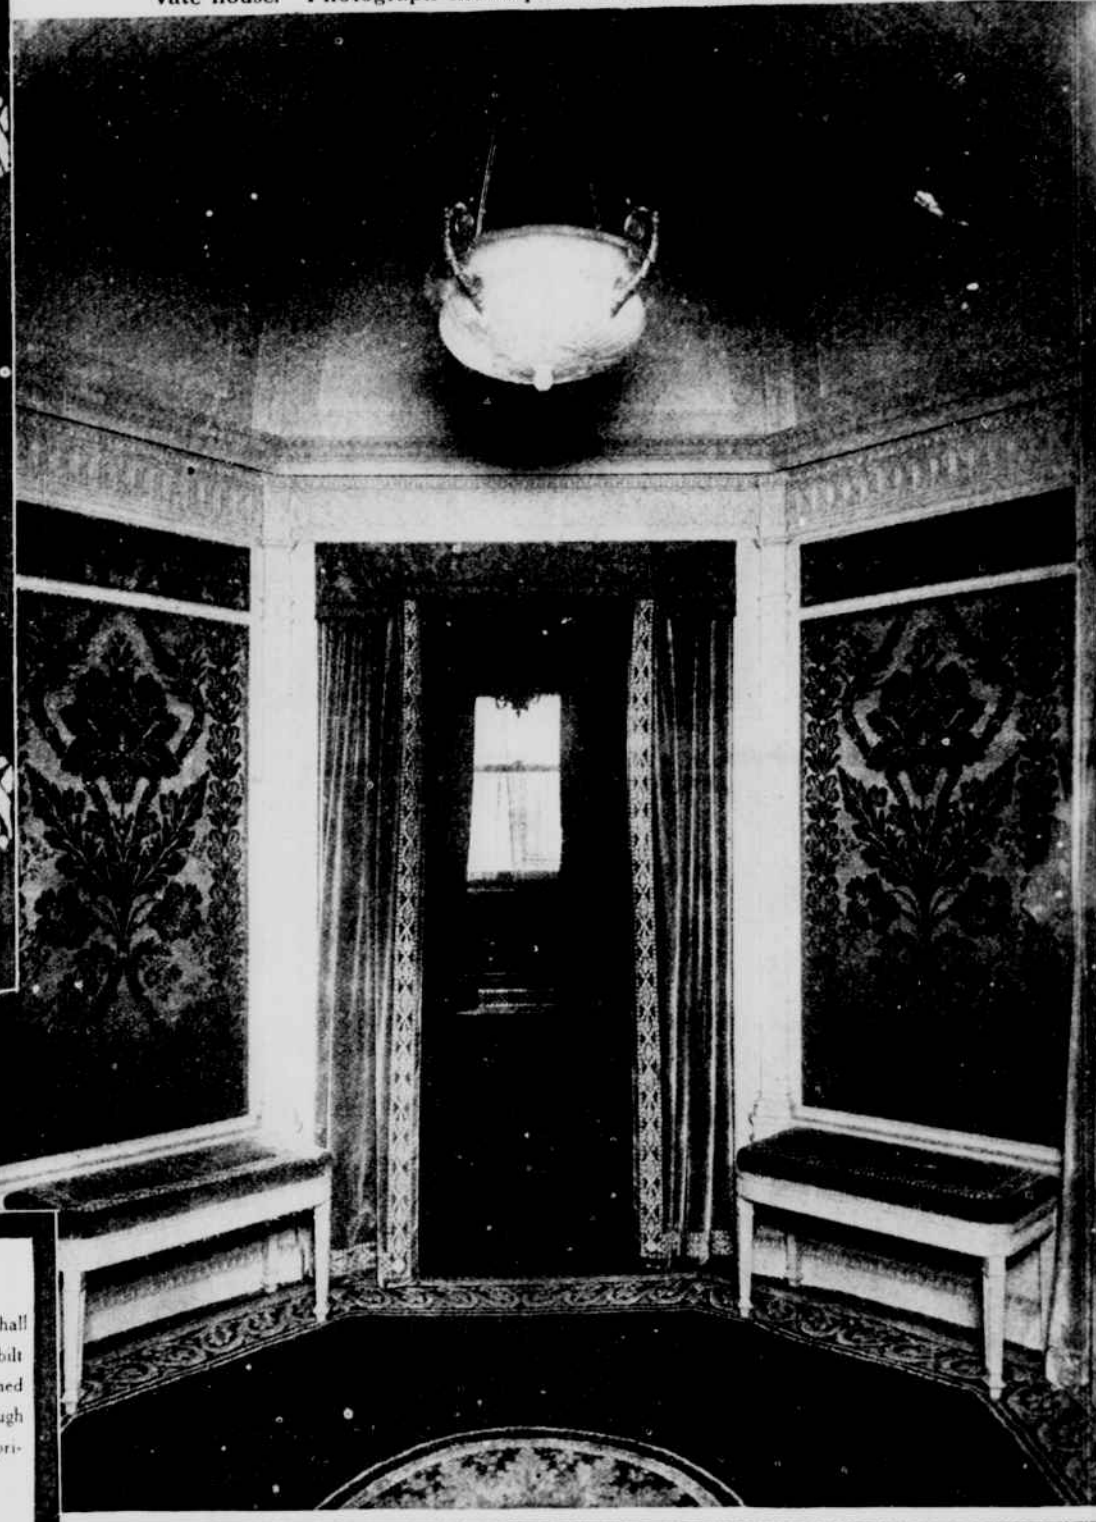

Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt had in their hotel apartments a library as complete as that of a private house. Photograph shows part of the Vanderbilt suite library.

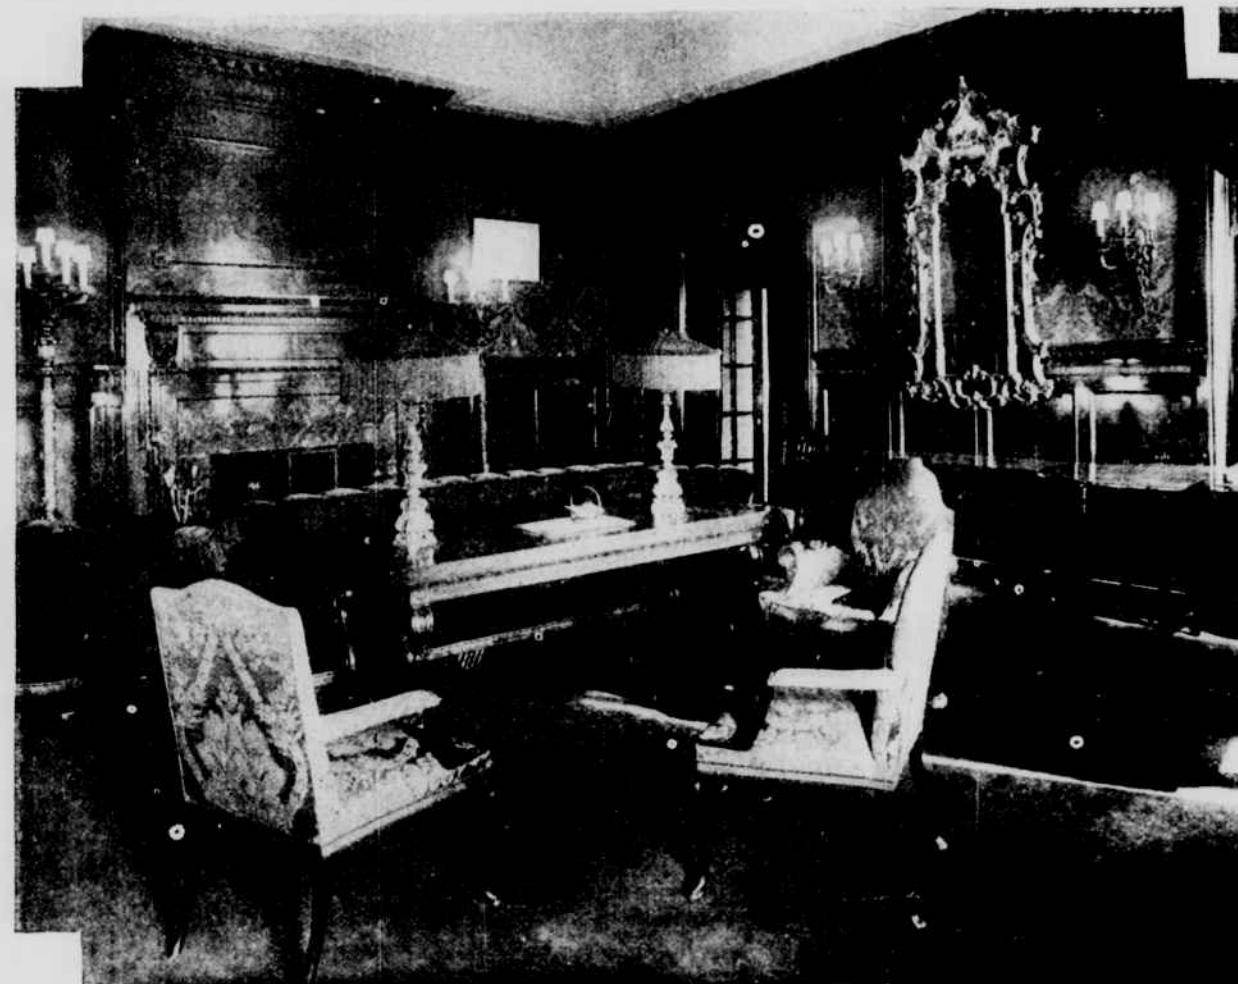

Views of the Home of the Women's City Club of New York, formerly the town residence of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred G. Vanderbilt, in the Vanderbilt Hotel. In these apartments the youngest son of the man who perished on the Lusitania was born. They will be remodelled to suit the needs of the club. These are the first photographs ever published of the rooms occupied by Alfred G. Vanderbilt in the hotel which bears his name.

Photos by International News Service.

From the street to the living room of the Vanderbilt suite was like going from asphalt to asphalt. Photograph shows a living room corner.

The entrance hall to the Vanderbilt suite was designed and built as though it were for a private dwelling.

Another view of the living room in the Alfred G. Vanderbilt suite in the Vanderbilt Hotel.

Alfred G. Vanderbilt's bedroom in the Vanderbilt suite. He left this room to sail on the Lusitania. He went down with the torpedoed ship after seeing that his wife and other women passengers were safe in lifeboats.